Families of Marines wait in fear for news from sons

By the Associated Press

The sounds of grief across America on Monday were car doors slamming and doorbells ringing as Marine officers and Navy chaplains called at the homes of families who lost sons and brothers and fathers in the weekend bombing in Beirut.

The Pentagon spokesman said notification officers go to the homes of the dead Marines. If a chaplain is available, he accompanies the officer.

The relatives of servicemen who had been killed reacted in anger and anguish after the visits by chaplains and other officers who personally bore the sorrowful news.

But in some homes, the laughter of relief broke the tension when families heard their loved ones were safe. Shirley Erikson's son called her in Westland, Mich., to let her know he was safe. Wayne Barker of Chandler, Ariz., got a similar call from his brother.

Katie Morrison of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., recognized her son, conscious but being carried on a stretcher, in an Associated Press photograph printed in the Poughkeepsie Journal. "He's alive, he's alive, at least he's alive," she said.

Charles and Ann Madaras of Potomac, Md., spotted their son, David, in another AP photo as he and three other Marines helped carry a wounded man from the bombed building.

Rose and Bennie Harris of Woonsocket, R.I., saw their son on a stretcher on television. Later he called them. "He sounded good, very good," Mrs. Harris said, her voice choking. Sandra Robinson of Windsor, Vt., heard unofficially through a Red Cross hotline that her son was safe.

Other families, however, waited to hear as names of the victims slowly trickled out Monday.

DiBenedetto's son killed in Lebanon

By Daily Campus Staff

The son of Anthony T. DiBenedetto, university vice president of academic affairs was one of the two Connecticut Marines killed in Sunday's bombing in Beirut.

Lance Cpl. Thomas DiBenedetto, 24, was one of 10 marines on the first list of casualties released by the service at noon yesterday, the university Office of Public Information said.

According to university spokesman Walt McGowan, DiBenedetto was born May 15, 1959 and was one of five children. He was a 1977 graduate of E.O. Smith High School in Mansfield and attended Thames Valley Vocational Technical College in Norwich, although he did not graduate.

DiBenedetto travelled around the country for a year until April 1982 when he joined the Marine Corps. He was assigned for duty in Lebanon as a demolitions expert and reported to Beirut in June for a six-month tour of duty. He was to return in November, McGowan said.

Anthony T. DiBenedetto was at a university Board of Trustees meeting in Waterbury yesterday morning and according to McGowan was notified of his son's death in the early afternoon on his return to campus.

The DiBenedetto family declined to comment.

President John A. DiBiaggio would only say that DiBenedetto's mother "is very broken up," and Carol Wiggins, vice president for student affairs called his death "a tragic situation."

"He wasn't the Marine-type," said Dan Duffy a neighbor of DiBenedetto who went to high school with him.

Georgia Dunterman, DiBenedetto's guidance counselor at E.O. Smith quoted by the Associated Press said teachers remembered him "as a rather quiet young man, interested in math and science and not too sure of whether he wanted to go to college or not."

"He was just a normal kid. He just went along and did what other kids do," Dunterman said. "He was a nice kid, quiet, never a discipline problem."

AP said the other Connecticut Marine killed in Sunday's bombing was Lance Cpl. Duane Wigglesworth, 19, of Naugatuck.

Death count at 191

BEIRUT (AP) — One by one, the bodies of American Marines were pulled from their shattered Beirut command post Monday, pushing the toll to at least 191 killed in the bloodiest attack against the U.S. military since Vietnam.

In Washington as a political furor built over the Marines' mission, President Reagan declared that they will stay because "we have vital interests in Lebanon."

Across America, meanwhile, military messengers fanned out to bring news to scores of families of their loved ones' deaths in the Sunday morning bombing, carried out by an unidentified suicide terrorist who detonated a bomb-rigged truck.

At least 23 French paratroopers also were killed in a similar, almost simultaneous attack at their command post, one mile from the Marine base. French President Francois Mitterand unexpectedly paid a personal visit to Beirut Monday, stopping by both sites.

Both Iran and Syria rejected U.S. suggestions that those countries were behind bombings. Syria's government newspaper described it instead as a blow by Lebanese nationalists against "occupation forces."

An anonymous telephone caller had claimed responsibility for the attacks in the name of the "Islamic Revolutionary Movement," a previously unknown group.

Business school to be upper division only

By Brian Dion
News Editor

WATERBURY — Citing career indecision by students and crowded classroom conditions, the Board of Trustees unanimously approved a recommendation to make the School of Business Administration an upper-division school.

The new status to begin in the 1984 academic year, will make admission to the school open only to students completing four semesters in another school or college.

Incoming UConn freshmen interested in business will have to apply to the college of liberal arts and sciences without a guarantee that they will be accepted to the school of business after completing two years of related course work.

Ronald Patten, dean of the school of business said students with at least a 2.75 grade point average will be accepted.

UConn President John DiBiaggio told the board that this is the first part of a masterplan which includes similar recommendations affecting all undergraduates schools. "This board will be engaged in critical activities this academic year that will be invaluable to the university" he said.

DiBiaggio, who strongly favors admission changes for many schools said, "I've always felt students should be accepted to the arts and sciences first." This particular action today, he said, would be very helpful to the university.

The status change in the business school has the support of faculty and staff, according to Patten.

Curriculum proposal passes Here at UConn Tech College

You don't go to a market to not buy food. You don't turn on the stereo to not hear music. And you shouldn't have to go to a university to not study your major.

The Board of Trustees overwhelmingly voted in favor of having all future school of business administration majors spend the first two years of their education in the school of liberal arts.

After this general education base, they would have to apply for admittance to the school of business. A grade point average of 2.75 was the suggested minimum for eligibility. The university, with strong endorsement from President DiBiaggio, would like to see all schools here adapt this plan for spending two years in the school of liberal arts.

There must be alternate solutions to the overcrowding problem in the professional schools. Wouldn't it be possible to evaluate each student after each semester? The criterion could be as strict as desired, and the entire structure of the university wouldn't have to be altered.

And what about the students that don't make the grade under the new plan? Will they find themselves obliged to stay in liberal (not so sm)arts? A moderately talented student should have the same right to freedom of choice as the exceptional one does. And it doesn't do surgery on the reputation on our school of liberal arts in the process.

This policy is in effect at both the University of Michigan and Virginia, and DiBiaggio calls it the secret of their success. Dr. John W. Vlandis, Director of Admissions, voiced concern that students would react strongly against the change at first, but we were assured that it had the support of faculty and administration. Well, we know a few faculty and administrators that aren't too happy about the whole thing.

They aren't talking too much though, and none would allow their names to be used. That doesn't seem so odd when you consider what the proposal may eventually entail.

The art school in the school of fine arts is a prime example. There is a plan for a new MFA program, which is an excellent idea. There is, however, no additional funding set aside for this development. The money will come from faculty and course cutbacks, and no wonder nobody wants to see their criticism go in print. When heads roll, everyone wants to be in the clear.

The theory is that, since 50 percent of the students in the art courses are not art majors, these courses could be cut by half and not affect the school itself. God help the students that are in some other area but want to develop their talents and appreciation of applied art. They probably won't be able to do it here.

Now take the serious engineering major. Fresh cut out of high school and ready to take on the challenge of his chosen career (this is America, after all), he finds himself instead learning French. Not that there's anything wrong with French, but his sliderule is gathering dust. When someone needs something designed in the future, will they be more impressed with a second language, however romantic, or with a skilled pro-professional with four rather than two years of intensive study?

He develops as a human being; a lot of people could use that. But if the proposals go through, he won't develop himself in drawing or painting - couldn't if he wanted to. That's not freedom of choice as we see it.

The music major that wanted to study viola would not have an equal opportunity to develop fully as a musician because he would be stuck for two years in arts and sciences. He could augment his training with electives and private lessons, but that shouldn't be necessary when he's going to a university to learn the skills necessary to become a professional musician. We have technical schools in the state. A university should be more than that.

We may upgrade the standing of our already prestigious business school, but it's going to be an expensive vanity.

Letters to the Editor

History isn't repeating itself

To the Editor:

Your assertion that history may be repeating itself by comparing U.S. involvement in Lebanon to that in Vietnam is naive to say the least. Increased political awareness in the 1980's resulting from our 'moral wrong' in the Vietnam debacle and the War Powers Act of 1974, which requires Executive action involving U.S. troops to have Congressional approval will prevent the type of escalation which occurred in Vietnam. The most recent agreement between Congress and the President to prevent the immediate enactment of the War Powers Act put restraints on the U.S. force; the number of men to be limited to 1,800, and the duration of stay to be 18 months pending review. Thus it is not likely that we will see 500,000 U.S. troops committed to Lebanon as were at one time in Vietnam.

President Reagan has not been given a free hand to use United States Marines in Lebanon. Yesterday's tragic bombing and heavy loss of life and the subsequent public, and Congressional outcry of disapproval will bring even more pressures on Reagan to reassess his current policies and begin greater efforts and new initiatives in the area of diplomacy.

As for former President John F. Kennedy, unfortunately he was assassinated before U.S. troops had become deeply committed in Vietnam. We will never know whether he would have escalated United States involvement or whether he would have withdrawn U.S. troops after the 1964 election as a number of critics now argue.

International relations offers job opportunities

By Elaine Christensen
Staff Writer

If you want to get an international relations job there are lots of openings, but to get one it helps to start thinking "in international terms" while you're still here.

This was the general view of four UConn graduates who are either studying or working in the international relations field.

Lucien Vanderbruckle a research fellow at Brookings Institution, stressed that many students do not know that there are many jobs in international relations outside the state department.

"There are many careers in the private world," Vanderbruckle said. Other careers involve work with consulting firms, "think-tank" firms like Brookings Institution, international banking, and international corporations.

Vanderbruckle also said that it is important to "get your feet wet in internships." Most jobs, he said, depend on making one's self known. "One gets a job through recommendation," Vanderbruckle said. "Job recruiting is not usually done through anonymous resumes."

James Kelman, an international fellow at the United States Information Agency, said that it is good to spend one year abroad to "broaden your horizons and to think in international terms." He spent a year abroad in London before earning his masters degree in public affairs. Kelman then served an internship in Washington under Abraham Ribicoff a former senator from Connecticut.

Kelman said that it is important "to get to know people with similar interests because contacts are very important in getting the job you want."

He also said that one's resume should describe the person and his attributes specifically. "The resume is an exercise in creative writing," Kelman said. "You sell yourself by showing that you are self-confident and have the attributes they want."

Elaine Friedenburg, an associate benefits analyst for Travelers Insurance company, changed her major several times before graduating as an economics major with emphasis on international relations. This combination aided her in getting a job in the company's international department. Her job is to provide group insurance to corporations and their subsidiaries in other countries.

Friedenburg noted that there "is growing interest in international banking, a field which should not be ignored."

Shirley Slye, student placement counselor, said that the Career Resource Center in Hall Dorm has information available for students interested in international relations. "Many students have poor self-images," she said. "Because competition for jobs is becoming more complicated, it is important for students to set up internships and begin networking while still in school."

Business school to see change

Patten said his problems with the current system lie in the fact that there is one opening for every three applicants and 40 percent of freshmen entering the school change majors before their junior year.

"It is unrealistic to ask young men or women to know what they want to do with their life while in high school," Patten said.

Board member Elizabeth Bradlau said exceptions should be made to allow merit scholars (students in the top 10 percent of their high school class and having a minimum of 1200 on their SATs) to enter the school as freshmen. She said her reasons were based on interviews with more than 15 high school guidance counselors who say top quality students might decide to go elsewhere if not accepted to the business school as freshmen.

"The drastic change, I fear, will hurt the university," Bradlau said.

UConn officials involved with the decision said the only negative aspect of the plan was predicted by John Vladis, the director of admissions. He said the transitional stage will produce much discomfort among students directly involved.

DiBiaggio said "some students in specialized areas get very narrow educations." He said he was in full support of the proposal made by Anthony DiBenedetto, vice president for academic affairs.

DiBiaggio said although the administration recommends these changes "some schools don't feel comfortable doing this."

Andrew Canzonetti, chairman of the BOT, said "we can currently looking at all these proposals, now that we have acted on the most urgent." He said these proposals are in the best interest of the students education and "will make the climate here more advantageous."

The business school plan is the same used by the Universities of Michigan and Virginia to accept students into their highly rated business schools, according to Patten.

The school of business was recently rated 27th among the over 1,200 other business schools in the country, Patten said, and this new requirement will give the school a higher rating.

Emma joins business school

The former chairman of one of New England's largest retail stores will join the school of business of administration Nov. 1.

Arthur J. Emma, former head of G. Fox and Co., will serve as assistant dean for corporate programs, it was announced today by Dr. Ronald J. Patten, dean of the business school.

Emma will have responsibility for relations between the business school and the Greater Hartford business community, Patten said.

Emma retired last year from a retailing career that spanned 32 years, the last eight of which were spent at G. Fox and Co.

A member of the National Retail Merchants Association, Emma is a Brooklyn, N.Y., native who received his bachelor's degree from Cornell University. After four years of service as an officer in the U.S. Air Force during World War II, Emma joined Jordan Marsh or Boston where he was a buyer. Later he became division merchandise manager at Gimbel's in Milwaukee, WI. Emma subsequently became general merchandise manager for Thalheimer's in Richmond, VA, and from 1969-73 was president of M. O'Neil Co. of Akron Ohio. He became chairman of Fox's in 1976.

Patten, in announcing Emma's appointment, said UConn "is very fortunate in having engaged the talent of Mr. Emma in support of its programs." He noted that in his capacity as assistant dean for corporate programs, Emma joins Joseph H. Allen, former executive vice president of United Technologies Corp., who is responsible for relations between the business school and the Fairfield County business community.

UConn's business school, said Patten, has been ranked in the top 30 in the nation and is intensifying its efforts to work with the business community.

Patten said that Emma's appointment represents a continued and intensified commitment on behalf of the University to the Greater Hartford Area.

Currently, he said UConn's business school operates an evening MBA program with about 500 students and an Insurance Certification Program, with about 400 students, at the school's facilities at 39 Woodland St., Hartford.

16 English internships offered

Sixteen internships in writing will be offered by the English Department during the spring semester.

Designed to provide individual supervision in writing, the internships will function as a bridge between purely academic writing and writing as it is practiced outside of the classroom.

Unlike the Co-op program which is directed toward juniors, and involves money, the internships are solely for credit. Students work ten hours a week for three credits. They are supervised and required to submit a portfolio of their work at the end of the semester.

While most interns are English majors in their senior year, the program has placed students from other disciplines, providing their writing skills warrant it.

Half of this spring's placements will be on campus, and half will be within an hour of Storrs.

50 U.S. Marines land in Barbados; help citizens

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — About 50 U.S. Marines landed here Monday and immediately flew off in three helicopters. The American Embassy said the Marines might be used to help take Americans off the troubled island of Grenada.

An Associated Press reporter saw the Marines, in combat gear, get off a large white U.S. Navy transport plane at Bridgetown's Grantley Adams International Airport and board the two Sea King transport helicopters and a Marine Huey helicopter gunship.

The three helicopters departed at 5 p.m., heading north across the runway and then veering south. It could not be immediately determined if they were headed for Grenada, which is southwest.

"What you are seeing could be used as part of the options to effect a departure of the Americans from Grenada and to ensure their security," U.S. Embassy spokesman Mike Morgan said. He declined to elaborate.

Grenada's new military regime kept its airport closed to commercial traffic Monday, frustrating efforts to arrange a departure of at least 200 Americans who want to leave.

Morgan said without elaboration, "All options are under consideration as far as the departure of Americans is concerned."

A Western diplomatic source said between 200 and 300 of the approximately 1,000 U.S. citizens on the island want to leave, and their "voluntary departure" had been "at least temporarily frustrated."

Government owned Radio Free Grenada said Sunday the airport would open on Monday, but it later announced that the ruling military council feared an invasion by American, British and neighboring Caribbean forces.

Jessica Savitch dies in crash

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jessica Savitch died in an automobile accident Monday at the age of 35, still in pursuit of the "big things" in network TV. Killed along with her was New York Post executive Martin Fischbein, 34.

She was a success by almost any standard of the business. A network executive called her "a television natural," and only a year ago viewers ranked her just behind three anchormen — Dan Rather of CBS, Roger Mudd of NBC and Frank Reynolds of ABC.

At the height of her career, she substituted for John Chancellor and David Brinkley on the "NBC Nightly News" and anchored the Saturday edition of the program. She was favored by many to become the first woman to anchor a network evening newscast on her own.

As recently as August, she lost her weekend job to Connie Chung, who was hired away from the CBS station in Los Angeles, KXNY. Miss Savitch was assigned the twice-a-night "NBC News Digest" report with a promise that she would take over the Sunday "Nightly News" after the first of the year.

With her career seemingly in ascent tragedy struck. Dr.

Donald Payne, an obstetrician and gynecologist and her second husband of less than six months, hanged himself in the basement of their Washington home. Her first marriage had ended in divorce.

day afternoon. Some prayed. Some tried to keep busy. All tried not to listen for the dreaded slam of the car door or knock at the front door.

"I've been working around the house, cleaning up and trying to keep busy," Harold Montgomery, an Austin, Texas, bank officer said. "We sort of figure no news is good news."

Marine officials told frantic families calling Washington that they would be notified only in cases of death or injury; there would be no official announcements about Marines who were unhurt.

Officers and chaplains were typically working 12-hour shifts to bring the news of dead servicemen. Immediate reactions among family members were mixed.

"It goes all the way from being very matter-of-fact to taking the notification very, very hard," said Richard Boyer, a chaplain at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

He said the chaplains tried to comfort the families and answer questions about funeral arrangements. "No chaplain feels good about rubble of the Marine post, command spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan told reporters: "There's nobody alive in there now. No, it would be a miracle."

Earlier Monday, when the death toll stood at 161, officers estimated 50 Marines and U.S. Navy men remained buried under the crumbled concrete. During the day, cranes lifted heavy slabs, rescue workers clawed through the debris and bodies continued to be pulled from the ruins. Besides the mounting toll of dead, about 75 wounded were evacuated to U.S. military hospitals in Europe.

New stories emerged of the horror of the first minutes after the explosion.

One surviving Marine, Robert Calhoun, 21, of San Antonio, Texas, said he was on the roof of the four-story building when it collapsed knocking him unconscious.

When he awoke, he told reporters "I got up and my friend Joe was with me and he was trapped. I unburied him. We got up and we heard a thousand people, it seemed like, screaming 'Help me: God help me!'"

In the U.S. capital Monday, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Congress is "going to have a complete review of why we're there and whether it is worthwhile to keep our boys there for diplomatic reasons."

But Reagan, at a White House news conference, said of the Marines' role, "The mission remains and it remains unfulfilled."

He said the bombing was "a horrifying reminder of the type of enemy in many areas of the world today - vicious, cowardly and ruthless."

As he spoke, more than 300 fresh Marines from Camp Lejeune, N.C. were on their way to Beirut to replace their dead and wounded comrades, who were part of a multinational force supporting the embattled Lebanese government's efforts to reassert control over this strife-torn nation.

Lebanese President Amin Gemayel told his Cabinet that, despite the bombings, he remained determined to convene a scheduled reconciliation conference in Geneva, Switzerland, next Monday, the Lebanese state radio reported.

The meeting of representatives of Lebanon's rival religious and political factions is aimed at ending years of civil war, a conflict touched off in large part by Moslem demands that the Christian minority give up its dominant political role here.

At the airport Monday the remaining Marines from the 1,600-man U.S. ground force were reinforcing barriers and stepping up other security measures.

Afro-American Center needs support

By Christine Carbone
Campus Correspondent

The Afro-American Cultural Center needs more support from the campus community in order to sponsor more programs, according to Assistant Director Liston Nathaniel Filyaw.

"I would like to see more people come out and get involved, especially during Afro-American Cultural month in February," Filyaw said.

Filyaw said the center has sponsored many different programs in the past such as fashion shows, hair shows, art exhibits, lectures, seminars, music and drama but it still lacks involvement from much of the college community, especially white students.

"People think the Afro-American Cultural Center is just for black students but it isn't," he said. "It would be more of a learning experience for white students who participate."

"Heads" bring mystical aura to Atrium Gallery

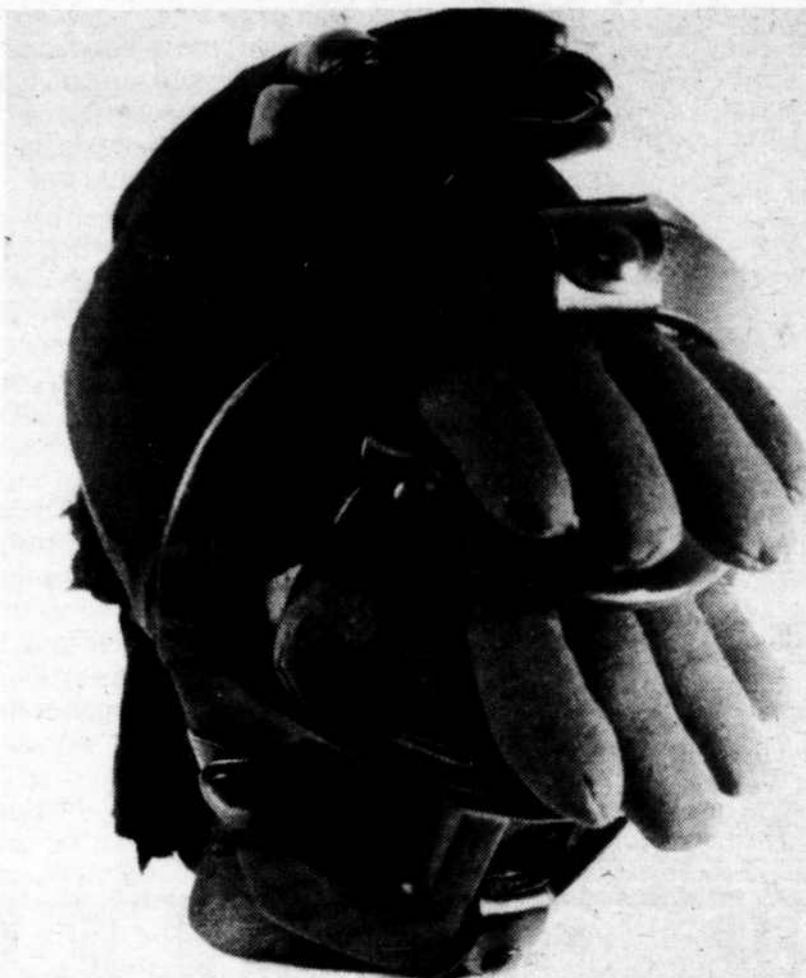

By Marie Gallo-Hall
Arts Editor

"Heads" is a group of three dimensional artwork that is exhibited at the Atrium Gallery in the School of Fine Arts. It is made up of exactly what the title implies - heads.

These heads capture the imagination immediately. Made up of the white styro-foam dummies used for wigs, they are decorated with such things as old stockings, wool, cord, nails, leather, and old gloves. Together these materials make up basic outlines of heads, each with a character all its own.

"Astroeth" is created through the use of baby bottle nipples. The actual head is covered with a stocking, but the face is covered entirely by these nipples. The face of "Azibel" is also unusual, being made up of many gloved fingers protruding from the figure. Then there is "Pahadron" with its features composed of screws.

Most of the heads have

unusual features such as these. Many have no features at all. They are merely masses of material bound and layered together. In any case, the only head with the outline of an actual face is "Apsu" and even this is only because of a leather mask which covers it.

Lois Jean Knobler, creator of these heads, describes heads as the "most potent image that anyone could conceive" and as an "energy base."

"If you think of the things heads imply, you think of the center of the body, of the brain. It excites me as a central source, as a primal source," she said.

Out of this excitement came her creations. "It was a revealing process," Lois said, "Images that were almost full blown came before me."

This is the first time that these creations have been exhibited. Until now they have been kept up in a bag in Lois' studio.

This brought conflicting emotions to Lois. Part of her felt possessive of her personal feelings in these figures. Another part, however, felt excitement. "What an adventure I will have to let them go," Lois said. "I can look at them differently. I can care about them as aestheticized objects."

And that they are...pieces of art open to many interpretations. Yet, there is something extraordinary about them, something almost mystical. Perhaps Joyce Goldman Brodsky of the Art Department described them best when she called them "mummified totems of malevolent beauty."

Parents play vital role in a student's success

By Carol Carangelo
Features Editor

Julie's parents separated when she was an adolescent. By the time she graduated from high school, they were divorced. She had found it more and more difficult to communicate with her parents and as a result grew resentful, bitter and guilty. She refused to talk about it to anyone, and looked forward to the day she would leave home for college.

Since Bob was small, his parents directed his every move. They would tell him everything, from what to wear to what friends to choose. When it came time for Bob to leave for college, he had to choose a school and a major that he didn't particularly like, just to please his parents.

Difficulties in parent-child relationships such as the fictitious Julie's and Bob's are among the problems to be examined in a new campus psycho-therapy group called "Problems with Parents."

The group will begin under the supervision of Martin Krugman and Shelley Fellner-Rosenberg, two advanced graduate students in clinical psychology, after preliminary screening of patients at the Student Mental Health Services is completed.

Both students, who have completed internships dealing with parent-child relationships, have been experimenting with the idea for some time.

"A lot of my interest comes from personal experience," explained Krugman. "I was extremely rebellious as an adolescent and after teaching for several years, I thought the subject of why children separate from their parents was fascinating."

At the college-level, Krugman sees a special need for this type of support group.

"Students in college are facing an interesting transition to adulthood. Whether they are economically independent or not, they are facing independence and responsibility for themselves in many ways," he said.

At UConn in particular, Krugman has observed many different responses to parents, aside from Julie's or Bob's.

"UConn is known as a 'suitcase college' but why? Do students go home because they want to, or because it pleases their parents when they do? In high school, it seemed, weekends served the purpose of getting away from parents...to see friends or to party. And if you look at some students, they're majoring in something their parents want them to, not what they want," he said.

"Problems with Parents" will be a series of ten meetings dealing with any subject related to parents that has a significant impact on a person's life. This can include overly-restrictive parents, physically or emotionally abusive parents, students from homes with frequently absent or detached parents, or just someone who feels the need for a mediator in a particularly troubling situation at home.

Krugman and Fellner-Rosenberg are especially concerned with the many "Julies" on campus who mistakenly believe that as they leave home, their problems will be left behind.

"Different people have different response styles, as in coping with any problem," explained Krugman. "Some will dive into them, some won't. I am an advocate of direct approach. For example, a student who has an overly protective parent and does not acknowledge that, may then become an overly protective parent, thus creating a vicious cycle. It is very hard to establish the start of a problem," he said.

Although by the time a student reaches college age, he has attained a wide set of social skills that have enabled him to continue his schooling, the psychotherapists maintain that it is still an excellent time at which to reinforce weaknesses.

"College can be a fresh start to examine who you are, in what ways you would like to achieve, and what you want and need from life," Krugman said. "In most situations, parents will do a lot of things right, and a few things wrong. This group will focus on those strengths and weaknesses, and people who have needs for reinforcements in an area can achieve them in a different school or peer-related situation."

Krugman and the new group do not want to be considered advocates of an anti-parents approach, but instead to utilize the components of interpersonal communication.

"A parent's defense mechanism, like a child's, such as alcoholism, neglect or physical abuse may be a response to their son or daughter, or a way of hiding the negative impact their children are having on them," he said.

Krugman and Fellner-Rosenberg believe their service and many others at the Mental Health Center are taken for granted, yet both agree that it takes courage and maturity to recognize the aspects of one's life that are upsetting to him.

"Some (as in Bob's case) just don't know how to say no to their parents. They are unable to be assertive and unable to define their own needs. Then, for the rest of their lives, they will be doing things they don't want to do," Krugman said. "Then, they're just trapped in a corner of anger and resentment."

Even though college students may have plenty of peers to share domestic problems with, according to Fellner-Rosenberg, "they don't have to be in as much pain as they're in."

Kremlin putting new missiles in Eastern Europe

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union, in its strongest response yet to the planned deployment of U.S. missiles in Western Europe, said Monday it is readying its own new missile bases in East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Western military analysts believe the Soviet armed forces already have short-range battlefield nuclear missiles stationed on the soil of their Warsaw Pact allies. But Monday's announcement was the first public acknowledgement by the Kremlin that it was even planning a nuclear role for Eastern Europe.

"Preparatory work is being started on the territory of East Germany and Czechoslovakia for deployment of missile complexes of operational-tactical designation," the official Tass news agency quoted the Soviet Defense Ministry as announcing.

It said the preparations were "one of the planned response measures in case the American missiles are sited in Europe."

The plan was formulated in agreement with East Germany and Czechoslovakia, the ministry said. The announcement came as Czechoslovak leader Gustav Husak met in Prague with East German leader Erich Honecker.

The NATO allies are scheduled to begin installing 572 new U.S. medium-range Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in five Western European nations in December. Western leaders say these missiles will counter more than 200 Soviet SS-20 triple-warhead missiles stationed in Russia and targeted on Western Europe.

Negotiations in Geneva, Switzerland, to cut back these medium-range nuclear forces have stalled.

Western diplomats in Moscow described Monday's Soviet announcement as a further step in a Kremlin propaganda campaign aimed at convincing the West European public and governments to reject the U.S. missiles.

A flurry of Warsaw Pact activity on the missile issue was capped last week by a meeting of the East bloc's defense ministers in East Berlin. On Sept. 14, Warsaw Pact foreign ministers gathered in Sofia, Bulgaria, called for continued missile talks, but only if NATO delayed its scheduled December missile deployment.

The anti-missile movement in Western Europe staged massive demonstrations this past weekend demanding that the Pershing-cruise deployment be cancelled.

The Soviets are believed to already have SS-21 and SS-22 nuclear-tipped rockets in Eastern Europe - with ranges of 70 miles and 500 miles, respectively. Western analysts have said they believe the Soviets will add the SS-22 and the 300-mile-range SS-23 to SS-21s already positioned in East Germany.

A major sticking point in the Geneva missile talks has been the Soviet insistence that 162 British and French missiles be counted in the total of NATO rockets facing the Soviet Union.

U.S. purpose in Beirut

Congress demands clear explanation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Shocked and angered by the violence in Beirut, members of Congress demanded Monday that the Reagan administration provide a clear explanation of the U.S. purpose there. But most stopped short of calling for an immediate withdrawal.

"I don't think it is time for Americans to back down from terrorism," House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill told reporters. "But I think it is time we give the reasons why we're over there."

"The president needs to clearly define for the American people why their boys are being sent to die in Lebanon," Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia told the Senate.

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee predicted a congressional reassessment of U.S. policy in the Middle East as a result of the bombing that devastated U.S. Marines in their barracks at the Beirut airport early Sunday.

"We must find a way to share the burden of peacekeeping," Baker said. "We should not leave at the point of a gun, and I would stoutly resist that."

Baker said his main duty was to "try to keep this thing from turning into a political football."

The bombing, the bloodiest U.S. military loss since Vietnam, came four weeks after the Senate completed congressional action on a hotly disputed resolution authorizing the Marines to remain part of a multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon for another 18 months.

As both houses of Congress prepared to adjourn for the day in memory of the fallen Marines, Secretary of State George Shultz arranged separate closed-door briefings for the Senate and House. Members of the congressional foreign-affairs committees huddled with Middle East experts, including former Undersecretary of State Joseph Sisco.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, said the Armed Services Committee, which he chairs, will hold a hearing Tuesday for an explanation of how the administration plans to improve the Marines' security in Beirut.

Despite the tragedy, said Rep. Wyche Fowler, D-Ga., "we are in the Middle East because our national interests dictate it."

Fire mascot dies at U.C.

Freckles, the UConn Fire Department's Dalmation and a familiar sight to many people here, died last week, according to Fire Department officials.

Her body was cremated and the ashes will be buried in front of the firehouse as soon as a suitable monument is found.

Freckles, who was 12 years old, has been a familiar sight to people passing the firehouse since she was given to the department 10 years ago. She often greeted visitors and passersby with her loud but friendly bark. She was also a familiar sight on campus and she rode in the fire engine during the annual Homecoming Parade.

Personnel at the fire department said they are deeply saddened by her death.

Sooner Or Later You'll Get Responsibility Like This. In The Navy It's Sooner.

You're maneuvering 445 feet of guided missile frigate through the navigational hazards and non-stop traffic of one of the world's busiest ports.

But you'll dock safely. Because you know your equipment. You know your men. And even when the responsibility weighs in at 3,600 tons... you're ready.

After four years of college, you're ready for more responsibility than most civilian jobs offer. Navy officers get the kind of job and responsibility they want, and they get it sooner.

Navy officers are part of the management team after 16 weeks. Instead of boot camp, officer candidates receive four months of leadership training. It's professional schooling designed to sharpen their technical and management skills.

Then, in their first assignment, Navy officers get management experience that could take years in private industry. And they earn the decision-making authority it takes to make that responsibility pay off.

As their management abilities grow, Navy officers can take advantage of advanced education and training in fields as varied as operations management, electronics, and systems analysis. In graduate school it would cost you thousands; in the Navy we pay you.

And the Navy pays well. The starting salary is $17,000 (more than most companies pay). And that's on top of a comprehensive benefits program that can include special duty pay. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, the salary is up to as much as $31,000.

If you qualify to be an officer in the Navy, chances are you have what it takes to succeed. The Navy just makes it happen faster.

matches on its schedule," Morrone said after the 5-0 win over Old Dominion Sunday. "Some teams have played teams that you don't even know where the school is."

"Unfortunately we lost some inter-sectional matches early in the season but I'm very pleased with where we are now."

The Huskies are in good position heading into the rest of the season. The soccer team has been impressive in rolling through the New England matches with a perfect 7-0-1 record.

The New England soccer committee can only recommend teams for the NCAA tournament, a national committee actually selects the teams. In addition to doing well in the region, it is important to do well intersectionally. The next four matches will clarify whether the team continues its tournament string or fails to be selected for the first time since 1971.

N.Y. Marathon:

Errors hurt Smith's chances

NEW YORK (AP) — Rod Dixon's road to victory in the New York City Marathon was helped by his gamble to run some of the tangents in the closing stages in Central Park, while second-place finisher Geoff Smith admitted Monday that he made a mistake by running a straighter course.

"I chose to run the tangents in the park at the risk of getting knocked down in the crowds," the 33-year-old Dixon said one day after his dramatic come-from-behind, nine-second triumph in 2 hours, 8 minutes, 59 seconds.

"It was the right choice in the end. I could have fallen down or run into somebody."

"I felt I had to use every trick in the book to get those yards back," added the New Zealander, who never led until the passing Smith at exactly the 26-mile mark - 385 yards from the finish. "That was my last card. I used it to good effect."

Race coordinator Allan Steinfeld estimated that Dixon could have run perhaps 10-15 yards less than Smith by cutting across the course, which would have made a difference of only two or three seconds. But he added, "It was no trick. It was smart."

"When I got into Central Park, I didn't know where I was," said the fatigued 29-year-old Smith, who, in running his first marathon, stayed on the blue line that is painted along the course to help the runners go in the right direction.

"The blue line sort of entranced me," continued Smith, who staggered to the finish line in 2:09:08.

"It was my fault. I should have cut the corners. I'm a fool."

Smith, a world-class 10,000-meter runner - he made the 1980 British Olympic team in the event - said that running a marathon "was like being on the track for 26 miles."

a line," Shula, already the best-paid coach in pro football, said at his weekly news conference.

"With important games like the Rams and the 49ers coming up, I don't think it's fair to the people that I'm responsible for. And I have found myself thinking about things that I shouldn't be thinking about as we prepare for ball games."

"When I was approached, I showed interest in the offer and what they had to say. In order for me to be able to make an intelligent decision the only way to do that was to get all of the facts, which is all that I ever attempted to do," he said.

"This confirms my impression that Donald Trump has been engaged more in ballyhoo than in a serious effort to build his franchise competitively by sound professional management," Robbie said in a statement issued by the Dolphins.

Fifth-ranked Eagles face Huskies

By Greg Barden
Staff Writer

The top-ranked women's soccer team will play an important match this afternoon at 3:00 against New England rival Boston College, 12-2-0, at the UConn soccer field. If the Huskies, 16-0-1, can remain undefeated in their last two games they probably will be one of four teams to receive a bye in the first round of the 12-team NCAA championship tournament. They close out the regular season at home on Thursday against Westfield State.

Boston College tied the Huskies last year at home. A majority of the Eagle's team has returned this season to lead them to their number five ranking in the national coaches poll, while holding down the third position in New England.

The Eagle's two losses came early in the season. They lost at the Cortland tourney to the hosts 2-0 and fell to two-time defending national champ North Carolina 5-2. UConn opened its season by defeating UNC 3-1. BC can solidify their post season hopes by winning today or with a victory over UMass on Friday.

In the double overtime last year, UConn dominated play, but could only manage one goal in 110 minutes. The Eagle's goal was scored off a corner kick. "We had more chances to score, but they marked us very tight on defense," said Len Tsantiris, head coach of the Huskies.

Tsantiris feels his team is peaking just in time for post season action. "The players are now finding the right combinations," Tsantiris said.

Cathy Shankweiler has scored the game-winning goal in the Huskies last three matches. The sophomore has six goals and one assist in the last five games to give her 24 points for the season. Those statistics place Shankweiler second in scoring on the team to tri-captain Moira Buckley. Moira has 25 points (nine goals and seven assists) this season to push her career figures to 61 goals and 35 assists as the all-time leading scorer in women's soccer at UConn.

Freshman Laura Skaza will be in goal for UConn. In the 12 games Skaza has seen action she has allowed only six goals while shutting out six opponents.

Both the Huskies and BC are coming off victories over Radford College. On Friday, UConn beat Radford 3-0, while the Eagles defeated them 3-1 on Sunday. The Huskies scored their first goal just 10 minutes into the game and put pressure on the Radford goalkeeper throughout the game, outshooting the opponent 39-5.

The game will allow the Huskies to prove their New England dominance and gain the home field advantage for NCAA semifinals.

Men's soccer analysis:

Increased goal production boosts playoff hopes

By Bob D'Aprile
Sports Editor

When tournament time comes around the best collegiate soccer teams in the country usually rise to the occasion. The soccer team has had its troubles this season but it seems to have ironed them out heading into the toughest part of their schedule.

The Huskies have five matches remaining in the regular season and four of the five opposing teams have hopes of qualifying for the NCAA soccer tournament. UConn has participated in 10 of the last 11 national tournaments and the prospects are favorable it will be selected again.

After opening the season with just one win in their first four matches, the Huskies have a 9-2-1 record. UConn, with an overall 10-5-1 record, has quietly molded itself into a very formidable team.

The team started out the season without any real natural goal scorer and it has struggled for most of the season to put the ball in the net with any real consistency. With 15 goals in its last four matches, however, UConn has apparently found the range and is now confident in its scoring ability.

"We're just being more patient inside the penalty area," freshman Scott Cook said, offering a reason for the team's recent surge in scoring. "The team has a different attitude now. We're becoming more of a unit and shots are coming more naturally in the box."

That has been the difference in the last few matches. The Huskies have outshot the opposition in nearly every game this season. With a 310-105 advantage in shots, the soccer team has seemingly dominated its opponents. But until they scored three 5-0 wins in four games, the Huskies' dominance was in every category except goal scoring. Although the trouble was in scoring, the defense held the team together allowing one goal in just four matches.

Now that the forward line of Jim D'Orsaneo and freshmen Greg Barger and Cook have become more comfortable with each other, the goals are finally coming. Matt Addington, who led the team in scoring last season as a forward, has done well distributing the ball from his midfield position as well as getting his share of goals.

Cook and Barger have been a pleasant surprise with five goals each while sophomore E.J. Raftery has also added four goals on a sparse 18 shots.

Midfielders Eric Myren and Thoukiss Stavrianidis have also been integral parts of the scoring turnaround. Myren has doubled his career totals with three goals while Stavrianidis is the team leader in assists with nine.

While the offense is beginning to find the scoring range, the team's defense has performed up to expectations. Although a few mental errors have resulted in losses for the Huskies, the only time UConn has encountered a team that has appeared to score at will was Clemson. The defensive corps has been a consistent part of the team all season and with the goals finally coming in the Huskies appear to be in a good position for post-season tournament.

UConn has reached the Final Four for the past two years, but if they are to have any chance of repeating that showing the next four matches, all on the road, are crucial.

Wednesday the Huskies play at Providence. The Friars, a sure selection for the Big East tournament, have hopes of making the NCAA tourney and a win over UConn could assure their selection.

The Huskies visit Penn State and Rutgers during what could be the toughest weekend of their season. A loss for Penn State would take away any chances of them being selected for the tournament while Rutgers, which defeated Penn State 5-2 Sunday, is having its best season ever. The Scarlet Knights are ranked sixth in the nation with a 10-0-2 record.

Although the Huskies are presently rated below regional rival Brown, coach Joe Morrone is quick to point out that his team has one certain thing in its favor.

"Realistically, we're the only team in the country with 11 intersectional

Shula stays with Miami

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins Coach Don Shula, saying he was tired of the distraction, announced Monday that he was no longer interested in an offer of $1 million a year to coach the United States Football League's New Jersey Generals.

Generalsspokesman Kevin MacConnell said the Generals broke off talks with Shula, who now makes a reported $450,000 a year, over Shula's insistence that a valuable New York apartment be part of the deal. But Shula denied making such a demand.

"Arrangements to obtain a coach like Don Shula were just too complex and time-consuming at this point," owner Donald Trump said in a statement read by MacConnell. "A prime example of this was the possibility of an apartment in Trump Tower as part of a contractual agreement."

Apartments in the luxury high-rise cost $500,000 to $12 million.

"I have decided I am no longer interested in the New Jersey Generals. This thing has developed into a huge distraction and I think it's time to draw
